Milo church restoration underway

When the United Methodist Church in Milo was built in 1911, it's a good bet that its parishioners never envisioned that a fire would threaten it 99 years later.

On a Sunday afternoon on June 21, 2009, after parishioners had finished their morning services, wiring to a light fixture hanging in the sanctuary sparked a fire in the attic. Passing motorists noticed the fire and several people salvaged what they could from the church and food pantry before firefighters deemed entry unsafe. The church, located near the fire department, was heavily damaged but the quick response from the fire department is credited with saving the structure. The steeple's small historic stained glass window was destroyed as well the entire newly shingled roof of the main church due to the tremendous amount of heat from the fire.

The day after the fire, Rev. Michele St. Cyr, presiding minister, called Paul Davis Restoration, a division of Keith Trembley Builder.

Crews took the first steps in the anticipated 8-month process to restore the building for use. The pews and alter were removed; tin that covered the walls and ceiling was also removed. To reach the 21-foot-high ceiling, scaffolding was installed. All the hand crafted trim was removed and delivered to Paul Bunyan Lumber in Bangor, where owner Maurice Cyr, a millwork specialist, will be duplicating the trim.

Once these steps were completed, restoration began. Several trusses were replaced and the roof repaired. The entire attic area was scraped, sealed and primed. Steps yet to be accomplish include replacing all the tin on the walls and ceilings, installing new flooring and wainscoting.

Joe Ouellette earns mold certification

Joe Ouellette, mitigation and mold project manager, is now certified in Mold Remediation through the Institute of Inspection, Cleaning and Restoration Certification (IICRC), which has served as the Industry Guardian for the cleaning, inspection and restoration service industries for more than 30 years. As a non-profit certification organization, the IICRC helps ensure that consumers have access to trusted and trained cleaning professionals by establishing and monitoring certification programs and standards for these industries. To qualify for IICRC-Certified Firm status, businesses must demonstrate proof of insurance, maintain a written customer complaint policy with documented follow-up and provide ongoing education and training leading to certification for all technicians.

Paul Davis is the only company in the greater Bangor Maine area to have certified mold remediation technicians from IICRC.

Turkey Time!

Sonia Bourgoin, KTB marketer, left, and Lew and Hope Dyer helped delivered more than 60 turkeys to the soup pantry for the United Methodist Church church in Milo, the Milo Fire Department, and the Crossroad Ministries in Old Town in time for Thanksgiving.
